

SUBJECT: Here's the secret to teaching your preschooler, first grader, or second grader Black history (time sensitive).

ALTERNATIVE SUBJECT: Here's the secret to teaching Black history (time sensitive).

Can we talk? Sista to sista, mother to mother?

Teaching a small child Black history isn't easy.

There are very few teaching materials focused on Black history and Black culture. In other words, most materials are not created with our little ones in mind.

You're more likely to find a cast of talking animals featured in teaching materials and stories than Black characters and Black history.

And even if you happen to find Black-centered materials, they may not be age-appropriate!

So, the question is...

How do we manage to teach our young children Black history without harming their self-image?
How do we fulfill our duty to raise children who love the skin they're in as a Black mom?

Well, the trick is to integrate Black history into every aspect of our curriculum. For example, when you are teaching your child math, integrate engaging information about Black mathematicians. Every subject within our curriculum is another opportunity to teach Black history.

Once you normalize Black history and Blackness, learning about these topics becomes fun, engaging, and empowering rather than a boring chore for your child.

I personally teach my children the Goose Goose Duck way! Goose Goose Duck, an organization created by Black moms for Black moms, offers pre-made lesson plans that center Black history.

>>You can access their Black history teaching materials here<<

They've got informative, engaging lesson plans created for our children between the ages of 2-8!

The materials are just PERFECT for my little one! Every day my child sees themselves in the curriculum I teach. They learn that they come from a long line of Black American innovators and game changers! And they couldn't be happier!

Goose Goose Duck is holding a Black history month challenge. That challenge will give you the tools you need to teach trauma-free African American history, too.

I was able to get you, my loyal subscriber, an exclusive discount! So, give it a try and sign up for the challenge. In the process, you'll learn how to teach Black history; your child will develop self-confidence and self-love; and you'll be supporting Black business!

But act quickly! The exclusive discount will only be available for 2 days!

Don't miss out!
