

DON'T FORGET TO CREATE YOU AFFILIATE LINK FROM YOUR DASHBOARD AND INSERT YOUR TRACKABLE LINK IN PLACE OF THE BLUE TEXT.

CHALLENGE LANDING PAGE: <https://goosegooseduck.com/challengediscount>

SL: [Name], you're a Super Mom!

Not all heroes wear capes, some are just intentional about their children's formative years.

And you sure are a hero, that's why you're here.

By now, you must have received your Augustus Jackson printables.

The worksheets are an example of how you can teach even pre-k children about Black history. Thanks to my friend Monica Dorsey, you just got them for FREE.

Monica's the Founder of Goose Goose Duck, an online education platform that teaches the positive side of black history to young children.

This helps your children build confidence and respect for themselves and people who look like them.

Monica started Goose Goose Duck when she and her husband went in search of positive black history educational materials for their little girls...

Sadly, they couldn't find anything that taught black history to kids in an empowering way. So, they decided to create some... And share with the world.

Now, for the first time, Goose Goose Duck has rolled out a 30-day "No More Trauma Black History Challenge," with the goal to teach your kids how to love themselves and their race from their formative years.

No more do you have to watch the joy drain from their eyes in order to introduce your 4-7 year olds our history.

Protect your younger children from damaging their sense of worth while they learn about their roots. Most importantly, help them build a healthy self image and an expectation of excellence.

If this sounds like what you'd like for your kids, sign them up for the No Trauma Black History Challenge.

Love,

[NAME]

SL: Treat your kids to a positive black history month

Hey {first name},

No other cowboy equaled Robert Lemmons in his time.

And to date, he's still regarded as the greatest mustanger of all time.

Who is Robert Lemmons?

I bet you don't know. No one told you about him as a kid.

Because black achievements are usually considered less, or non-existent.

And I say this without the desire to play the victim card.

In 2022, treat your kids to a positive black history month where they get to learn about black achievements.

In their most formative years, your kids shouldn't learn only about the achievements of white people and the sufferings of the black race. Your kids should learn about the achievements of other melanated people.

This builds a healthy self image, skyrockets confidence and a capable mindset.

Shockingly, an average 5-year old black kid prefers a white friend to a fellow black kid. That says so much about their perception of how they see themselves.

Goose Goose Duck is looking to change this narrative one black kid at a time. That's why they've developed the "No More Trauma Black History Challenge."

And even if you have no idea how to teach this to your kids, the challenge starts by teaching you how to teach Black history to children ages 4-7 so they are strengthened and ready for the rest of the story in later years.

Then there's daily assignments for you and your kid to complete before advancing. And if you're a really busy parent, there's nothing to worry about because the challenge is self-paced.

From their most formative years, let your kids know they're not inferior to anyone.

Join the No Trauma Black History Challenge

Love,

[Name]

SL: Exclusive Discount for Your Kid

Hi {first name},

Despite popular belief, your kids can learn about Black History even as young as prek.

Teaching about Black history should not wait until children mature, because the farther you push it, the more they feel black achievements are irrelevant or non-existent.

You can protect your kids from traumatic events, without depriving them of knowledge about people who look like them.

This year, your 4-7 year old kids can join the No More Trauma Black History Challenge to learn about black history from a carefully crafted curriculum.

And if you sign your kids up today, you can get an exclusive discount.

Love,

[Name]

PS: It's a rare opportunity to protect your kids and build their self esteem from a young age. So, sign up NOW, not later. Later often becomes never and there goes your chance to help your kids develop a healthy mindset about themselves. Check it out!